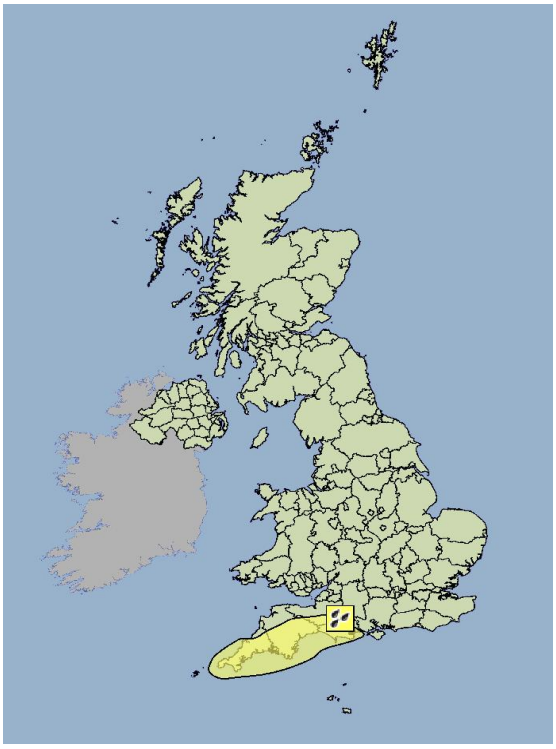
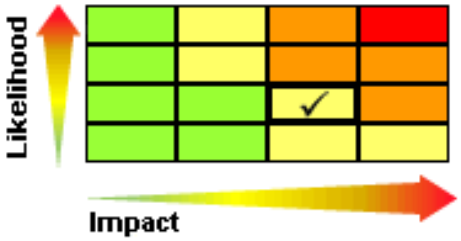
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Rain and transient hill snow will spread northwards later on Sunday. Rain will become heavy and persistent for a time before easing and becoming more showery during Monday. 20-30 mm of rain is likely widely, with 50-65 mm possible locally across exposed parts of south Dartmoor and south Cornwall. Some temporary snow is likely over the highest ground of Dartmoor Sunday evening, but this will soon turn back to rain.
This warning has been updated to confine medium impacts to southern parts of the Southwest Peninsula. Another low impact warning has been issued for other parts of England and Wales.
